ABOUT THE WORKSHOP

Research is an integral facet of teaching and learning process. Teaching and research are considered as inevitable elements to be inculcated for better understanding and dissemination of knowledge. Research is a creative and systematic work undertaken to increase the stock of knowledge. It is a serious investigation aimed at the discovery and interpretation of facts, revision and application of established theories in the light of new facts. Systematic inquiry of the questions is possible only with an amalgamation of research aptitude, critical acumen and application of relevant methodology.

In recent years, research in Language and Literature has become interdisciplinary. It has witnessed massive changes on account of technology assisted documentations, analytical tools and methodologies. The advent of technology has created revolution with regards to availability of primary and secondary resources to the researchers in the realm of language and literature worldwide. As a result, data collection and its analysis has become easy but it has posed high risk of unethical practices in the process of research. On the contrary, haphazard application of methods and tools creates major obstacles to draw fact based conclusions.

The contemporary advancements in various disciplines such as eco- criticism, geo criticism, corporal studies, cultural studies, socio-linguistics, ethno- linguistics and discourse analysis have made research in English exciting and challenging. Meanwhile, astronomical growth of online resources, digitized materials and e-books have changed the traditional approaches to analyze primary and secondary sources. It has made imperative to the researchers to update themselves with salient peculiarities in accurate application of research methodology in English language and literature. The main objective of this International workshop is to acquaint the post-graduate students, M. Phil. and Ph. D. scholars, teachers and future researchers with methods, tools, resources, documentation, research proposals and writing styles.
